Question1: Provide agricultural loans for other than beginning farmers.

Question2: We must develop alternate fuels from our corn, soybean, etc. crops if we truly want to release ourselves from the grasp of Mid-East oil. If we could convince the car manufacturers to develop engines that efficiently burn ethanol products we could end world terrorism because they wouldn't have any money to fund their operations.

Question3: Keep a maximum on the payments to the really big guys, but don't make it so complicated that a guy like me with a Master Degree in Business can't figure it out, and often the FSA doesn't even really know how to take full advantage of the programs offered.

Question4: Keep the CRP program set to expire in 2007. We need it for wildlife, which brings income to every state in the form of tourism and recreational spending. I can barely make my 350 acre operation break even. The land I have in CRP should never be broken up again, but I will have no choice if the CRP program is not funded past 2007.

Question5: You must invest in rural America unless you city dwellers have figured out how to feed yourselves.

Question6: Encourage the use of grains for alcohol based fuels by offering marketing incentives, such as a minimum price per bushel delivered to the plant.
