Question1: Cap benefits so that large operators can't use federal money to help finance land purchases.

Question2: Concentrate our food policy to benefit the American consumer not the producer.

Question3: Agricultural assistance should only be awarded to assist young farmers who don't have the means and to protect the resource for others to come.

Question4: Limit or cap the payments and insist that anyone getting benefits should be required to meet stringent environmental conditions.

Question5: All Federal and state programs should require that all employees be living in a rural area. Too much of the farm program bureaucracy is located in large cities and regional trade centers.

Question6: If the government is going to support these types of activities make sure that the small producer is protected and that the research and development takes place in a rural area.
