Question1: I think we need to facilitate the entry of new farmers into the market, otherwise we risk having all of our farming in the hands of a select few and that will not insure the health of Americans or the planet

Question2: We should prioritize and help where needed and not push our products when that would be counterproductive for the farmers in third world markets

Question3: We need to diversify and help small and mid-size farmers and not just large conglomerates. Our country is founded on the beauty of the family-run business. If we lose that, we risk losing all that America stands for

Question4: We cannot risk ignoring the fact that our planet is in peril. We need to implement policies that are planet-friendly and long ranging and not just stress short term gains. All gains will be for naught if the earth is no longer habitable

Question5: our country is becoming increasingly polarized. We need to return to the economic diveristy of the past in order to insure that all America can thrive. If we only think of the bottom line, much if not most of America will be forgotten. We can go on like this for a time, but eventually it will lead to unrest

Question6: Again, we need to stress the dvelopment of products that respects our families and the earth. To do any less will be shortsighted and potentially dangerous.
