Question1: There is the possibility for the implementation of plans where the government pays farmers to not use land bordering their fields and keep them pristine as a filtering area for any pollutants that may be in fertilizers and therefore cause less damage to the environment.

Question2:

Question3:

Question4: The use of less environmentally hazardous fertilizers, which pollute water, the use of less antibiotics in farm animals and the proper disposal of waste would help this issue. Plus, the occasional or constant retirement of some sections of land bordering the productive fields would catch runoff that otherwise might end up in local water ways.

Question5:

Question6: I think there needs to be focus on the use of animal byproducts and definitely some incentive programs for organic farmers due to the fact that they have less crop yield and have less of an impact on the environment.
