Question1: How about considering incentives for young people to enter the field? For example, industry is often given tax breaks for establishing new factories. Why not give beginning farmers deferred taxes for 5-10 years?

Question2: Supports for our commodities should be continued. As the world market develops, American farmers need to be able to compete with lower cost countries. If we allow our producers to fall by the wayside, who will grow our products in the future?

Question3: I really don't know.

Question4: Again, by providing substantial incentives for those individuals that work to achieve environmental and conservationist goals.

Question5: Education and research are vital to the success of the American farmer and rancher. It is critical that supports for land grant universities and other forms of agricultural education be supported in the farm bill. We cannot depend on the Department of Education to meet educational and research needs of agriculture.

Question6:
