Question4: One of the ways the Farm Bill can play a role in stewardship on the environment is to embrace urban forestry programs. Many of these are grass roots organizations that do so much with so little. I know in my community we would not have a reforestation program on the public right of way if I had not gotten involved with a small grass roots organization involved with urban forestry. Since then my community has embraced the program and funded it on it's own. There are many such organizations in the State of California and throughout the states that are doing tremendous work with urban forestry and it should not be overlooked as far as recognition and funding. Thanks for the opportunity to comment. Shannon Player
