Question1:

Question2: Farmland is rapidly being converted to other uses. This is especially true in the central valley of California. Steps need to be taken to make it easier to keep land in farming and more difficult to take valuable farmland out of production for real estate (housing) and golf courses.

Question3:

Question4: The nation needs to more vigorously support urban forestry programs which serve to conserve trees and educate the public and commerce about the environmental benefits of a healthy, diverse and widespread urban forest.

Issues such as energy conservation, water and air quality, and stormwater retention are all critically important to the future environmental quality of our nation, and urban forestry needs to be recognized for the role it plays in a healthy environment.

Support urban forestry programs by providing funding for education and programmatic improvements in urban forestry.
