Question1: This is more of a market phenomenon that can't be controlled via legislation. Land acquisition is only one barrier to a new farmer.

There is also the significant capital investment to acquire the machinery needed on the farm.

Question2:

Question3:

Question4: The continuation of CRP and CP33 programs is a good start.

Wetlands Conservation programs are also vital to not only conserving habitat, but also to enhancing water quality.

Question5: CRP should be considered a vital part of economic growth.

Many people travel from urban/suburban areas to access CRP land for hunting opportunities. If they have travelled a great distance, these people generally stay in lodging near these rural areas and support other local establishments such as restaurants.

Question6:
