Question1: Such unintended consequences should be addressed in the same way in which any sanct- ioning of neighborhood burg- lary discourges tenants from remaining. End this theft to taxpayers for giving loot to farmers. End, eg., subsidis- ing production of cotton at $.86/lb that is exported at $.37/lb. Get government bufoons out of the market.

Question2: The policy should be to stop interfering with the natural market's amazing ability to anticipate demand and set contracts that encourage trade. End coercing people to act against their reason.

Question3: There is no fair way to take from some innocent people and give the loot to others. Power-lusters should find productive, not exploitive goals.

Question4: It is hardly a secret that private forest lands are managed a grest deal better than are forests run by bureaucrats. Natural private selfish incentives to protect property insures the best conservation. The policy should be to sell government lands and reduce the national debt.

Question5: They cannot possibly do anything other than impede the free choice of rational traders to act in their best self interest. Federal rule to coerce parties to act against themselves is, of course, detrimental.

Question6: It is amazing that the question would be asked as to how marketing should be done. It should be done by the market, of course - surely not by the same friendly folks who run the Post Office. Their answer to wide public criticism of ineptitude is to try to fool everyone by changing their name. It didn't work.
