Question4: In today's society where the majority of the country's population lives in urban areas, it has become just as important to conserve and enhance the natural environment within the boundaries of cities and towns. All research indicates that trees and greenspace not only enhances the quality of life in these areas, but it also adds economic, environmental and health values by cleaning the air, providing clean water, controlling stormwater runoff, increasing property values, increasing business interests, providing wildlife habitat, and providing outdoor opportunities for relaxation and exercise. The Farm Policy can best achieve conservation and environmental goals by recognizing the value of urban forestry through additional incentives, stronger programs and increased funding.
