Question4: Help pay farmers to plant vegetative cover that cuts down on soil erosion and at the same time increases habitat for nesting waterfowl, upland game birds and other wildlife in critical areas such as the Prairie Pothole Region.

Help landowners restore America's most endangered ecosystems, grasslands, which are home to a wide array of species such as bison and sage grouse.

Encourage the re-establishment or protection of wetlands-many of which have been filled in and converted to farmland. Wetlands filter contaminants and sediment from water that enters lakes, rivers and groundwater, as well as support a third of all bird species and nearly 200 species of amphibians in the United States alone.

Provide financial incentives for farmers and landowners to create wildlife habitat on their lands. Already, more than a million acres and more than 8,400 projects have been approved under this program, significantly increasing wildlife benefits.

Question5: Invest in new technologies; help make agriculture viable economically.
