Question1: Land can be better used by promoting growing vegetables. The costs of feeding livestock and providing land for them far outweighs the costs of growing vegetables. Also, the global warming caused by maintaining livestock farms should not be overlooked. Farmers who can not make it can look for more profitable employment as others in nonprofitable occupations are forced to do.

Question2: I am more interested in quality of life than money.

Question3: There needs to a cap put upon the lowest price a consumer pays for a product. As it is, farmers products, because of mass production, are bought for too low a price from consumers.

Question4: The should work with enviromental groups.

Question5: Pay them for not growing crops or raising livestock until other means of earning a living is obtained.

Question6: Consumers need to be more educated regarding the American Heart Association, American Cancer Society, and the World Health Organization, WHO, recommendation to increase vegetable and fruit intake as a prevention for heart disease and cancer. The opportunity for the agriculture research department to inform consumers of the best eating habits can for instance cut down on obesity, over a 50% problem of citizens in this country.
