Question1:

Question2:

Question3: Current subsidies benefit large producers who subject animals to terrible confinement, mutilations, and aversive handling techniques.

The USDA should stop providing financial assistance to producers that participate in practices shown by scientific research to be inhumane.

Question4: Eliminating factory farming practices will greatly benefit both animal welfare and the environment. Propose setting minimum space allowances that provide animals with the freedom to perform natural behaviors and also protect the environment by reducing pollution and waste disposal problems.

Question5: Small farmers can't compete with mega-farms and producers who get enormous tracts of land for factory farming and, by treating millions of animals as "products," can produce more meat more cheaply.

How about rewarding farmers who let animals have appropriate grazing land, or use organic farming techniques, and giving them subsidies so that their product prices are more competitive?
