Question1:

Question2: Research has shown that consumers, both in this country and in Europe, care about how farm animals are treated. Unfortunately, US producers retain practices long ago abandoned by most European farms, including mild-fed veal, battery cages for chickens, and gestation crates for sows. Foreswearing these and other inhumane practices would be a major public relations plus for US farmers.

Question3: Currently, most benefits go to huge factory farms, which are inhumane and harmful to the environment. Support should be redirected to smaller farms, run with the welfare of their animals and the ecology in mind.

Question4: Again, support should be redirected away from large polluting producers and to farmers committed to conservation.
