Question4: The Farm Bill plays a large role in determining how our land stewards (primarily farmers and ranchers) choose to carry out their practices to achieve financial success, while weighing in local and regional conservation and environmental impact. In the short-term, CRP and WRP funded areas provide farmers with income on land that is less-productive. In the long-term these programs ensure productivity and livability for both ourselves and the flora and fauna with which humans share resources. These programs, and other programs which are intended to protect vital natural resources as well as provide financial support to the landowners themselves are vital. Our tax dollars must continue to protect our natural resources. The fitness and health of our environment is vital to everyone's success both today and for future generations. I ask that the Conservation programs within the 2007 Farm Bill receive even higher levels of funding that in years past.
