Question1:

Question2: The united states should set an example of compassion rather than competition. The first priority needs to be attending to the basic needs of the animals that are being farmed, not the drive to make the most money. When one takes the responsibility for a living being- any living being- it should be their first priority to ensure that that being is being provided with adequate living conditions and mental stimulation. Everything else needs to come second, and the United States should be one of the first to promote this. Focus on not only organic, but humanely raised products.
