Question1: Skyrocketing forestland prices are forcing owners to sell and divide parcels. This takes working forests out of production. There needs to be a way to prevent this parcelization.

Question2:

Question3: Forestland is 25% of the land and it should receive 25% of the benefits. This could be used to stimulate sustainable management so that owners don't take the quick money and ruin the forests.

Question4: CRP and tree planting are a start. Protecting wetlands and creating forested riparian buffers needs to become a higher priority.

Question5: Forest Certification would help protect us from losing markets.

Question6: There needs to be an incentive for owners to get their forest certified so that it is distinguished from recreational woodlands.

Properly managed woodlands need to be encouraged. It's not a high enough priority.
