

From: "ted@2-cool.com%inter2" <ted@2-cool.com>
Subject: Farm Bill 2007 Official Comments - 12/18/2005 11:36 PM CST
Date Sent: 12/18/2005 11:36:37 CST
Date Received: 12/18/2005 11:38:10 CST

Email: ted@2-cool.com
FirstName: Eduardo
LastName: Fernandez
Address1:
Address2:
City: Hialeah
State: Florida
zipcode: 33018

Question1: Farm policy should let these events run their course. The future of America is definitely not one of uneducated labor, which you can tell by reading the department of labor's occupational handbook.

Farming is a job that plenty of people can do around the world without an educational background freeing Americans to be in higher salary jobs.

Question2: USDA beef can fetch a premium because the USDA certifies it. All agricultural products that are exported should have this because consumers in some countries will be willing to pay more money for that reassurance.

Question3: While many farms in America are going out of business there are people starving all over the world. Subsidies for agriculture should be turned into a buyout program where extra productions is bought by the government and shipped to places like Africa. It is a win-win situation.

Question4: Farm policy does not need to address this due to the organic food movement.

Question5: Incentives such as tax breaks can be given for new companies to build there which will provide a tax base to spur further development such as roads and other infrastructure.

Question6: There should be a special certification on organic products especially when many companies are getting away with putting organic labels on items with minimum requirements to be called such. There also need to be research into if energy sources like biodiesel actually output more energy then is put into making them (I have heard to the contrary.) and emphasizing the made(and certified) in America quality for domestic and foreign markets.