Question1: Clean up to 2007 Farm Bill

Question2: Consumers do care about how farm animals are treated. It has become clear that the US falls short internationally for setting, and enforcing, minimum standards for the welfare of animals from farm to transport to slaughter. The USDA should step up and eliminate factory farming practices such as battery cages, CAFO's, veal crates and sow crates.

Question3: Current government subsidies benefit only large producers who subject animals to intense confinement, cruel mutilations and deplorable handling techniques. The USDA should STOP supporting these producers with subsidies year after year.

Question4: Elimination of factory farming processes would help the environment, the animals, and human health to a great degree. Until this is done, I do not see any other solutions. Animals, farmed or not, deserve to be allowed to respond to their natural instincts and live in their most natural environment- not in cages and CAFO's.

Question5: STOP providing subsidies and assistance to the large producers. Teach rural farmers true organic farming through community sessions and assist them financially if needed.

Question6:
